INTRODUCTION

The growth, over the last 30 to 40 years, in the size of legal professions and the upsurge of globalization has increased pressures on lawyers' ethical behaviours. Lawyers not only make bad choices but also are sometimes forced into situations over which they have little control because of issues of "double deontology."<sup>1</sup> Law firms hire general counsel and conflicts of interest managers to oversee internal compliance with ethics and regulation. The Solicitors Regulation Authority demands annual audits of compliance with its principles of outcomes focused regulation. This project concentrates on the types of lawyers that face disciplinary proceedings and the factors likely to be associated with their transgression.

There are several reasons why such a study is timely. From an academic perspective, there has been increasing interest in the subject of professional ethics in common law countries. In the US this was sparked by Nixon's Watergate affair in 1974 where after professional responsibility became a compulsory course in American law schools.<sup>2</sup> By comparison, the UK has come rather late to the party due perhaps to what Economides and Rodgers label as the UK's "ethical deficit".<sup>3</sup> They identify "[p]ositivism and pragmatism [as] the dominant values shaping modern legal education" resulting in the general neglect of ethical perspectives not only in the class room but also in legal thought.<sup>4</sup> Spurred by the desire not to be left behind in the global legal market the UK now has a greater sense of the importance of legal ethics to education and to practice.<sup>5</sup> This increased interest is marked by a rise in the number of texts around the world (including England<sup>6</sup>) and the launching of the journals such as Legal Ethics, the Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics, the International Journal of the Legal Profession; and a number of blogs that concern themselves with ethics including Legal Ethics Forum,<sup>7</sup> Legal Profession Blog,<sup>8</sup> Lawyer Watch,<sup>9</sup> and Random Academic Thoughts.<sup>10</sup> Richard Abel's book, Lawyers in the Dock, reviewing disciplinary proceedings against six attorneys in the US,<sup>11</sup> fuelled considerable international interest and comment on the disciplinary component of professional regulation.<sup>12</sup> Moreover, a number of universities have established law and ethics centres.<sup>13</sup> The centre at University College London recently produced a report, for Legal Services Board, suggesting means of benchmarking legal professional ethics.<sup>14</sup> And one of the key recommendations of the recent Legal Education and Training Review relates to legal ethics, values and professionalism.<sup>15</sup>

While Abel's study makes a very substantial contribution from the qualitative dimension, there is no quantitative analysis, even of the two jurisdictions he chooses. Indeed, the considerable complexity of the US jurisdictions in which attorneys operate would complicate such analysis. This means that it is not possible to say how representative are the cases that he presents, and infer from that the possible prevalence of specific types. Quantitative analysis will be easier in England and Wales, because there is a single jurisdiction for solicitors and barristers. There are, however, no empirical studies of lawyer disciplinary processes in the UK literature.

This project explored the factors associated with lawyers' ethical transgressions in the UK. We investigated the disciplinary procedures of both solicitors and barristers, producing a preliminary analysis of each using quantitative data generated by analysis of one year of cases before the Solicitors Regulation Authority and the Bar Standards Board published outlines of disciplinary proceedings and their outcomes. These were examined to identify the categories of data readily available and gaps in these data, for example, data of admission and gender, the firm, how the matter was referred to the tribunal, the facts, the finding and the sanction. The data was then allocated to categories for further analysis. Additionally, a small number of notable cases were selected as case studies for more detailed analysis. These concerned the coal health scandal, which though attracting notoriety had not been the subject of academic analysis. We also planned a small number of interviews with those in professional bodies concerned with or responsible for disciplinary processes.

A study of lawyer disciplinary processes is also timely from the point of view of public policy. The establishment of the Legal Services Board, with regulatory oversight for the legal professions, has focused attention on approaches to regulation. The Law Society has switched the emphasis of regulation from the individual to firms (or 'entities') and the Solicitors Regulation Authority has shifted to outcomes-focused regulation, which centres on the high-level principles and outcomes. Moreover, there have been changes in the structure of legal entities, such as Legal Disciplinary Practices and Alternative Business Structures. These developments carry profound implications for disciplinary mechanisms and processes. It is unclear what implications these changes have for the traditional methods of detecting and investigating legal disciplinary infractions.

CONTEXT FOR RESEARCH

The legal profession in England and Wales has a long established approach to the regulation of behaviour by solicitors. This is built on investigation and prosecution of disciplinary breaches by the professional bodies, with more serious cases being brought before disciplinary tribunals. These tribunals have wide disciplinary powers, including the ultimate sanction of striking off or disbarring offenders, thereby depriving them of their livelihoods as lawyers. They also have the power to re-admit offenders after a period of time.

The establishment of the Legal Services Board (LSB), with regulatory oversight for the legal professions, has focused attention on approaches to regulation. The arrival of Legal Disciplinary Practices (LDP) and Alternative Business Structures (ABS) has forced the Law Society to switch the emphasis of regulation from the individual to firms (or 'entities'). The Solicitors Regulation Authority (SRA) has adopted a system of 'outcomes focused regulation' (OFR)<sup>16</sup> based on a structure of auditing systems and processes. Advocates of this change anticipated that it would drive a number of modifications in professional regulation.<sup>17</sup>

Changes in regulatory method inevitably carry implications for disciplinary mechanisms and processes. As part of the OFR the Solicitors Regulation Authority have abandoned the Solicitors Conduct Rules 2007 and adopted a new handbook.<sup>18</sup> This replaces the rules of professional conduct with high level principles, mandatory outcomes and 'indicative behaviours', ways in which, depending on context, the outcomes may be met. The high level principles require solicitors to:<sup>19</sup>

1. uphold the rule of law and the proper administration of justice;
2. act with integrity;
3. not allow your independence to be compromised;
4. act in the best interests of each client;
5. provide a proper standard of service to your clients;
6. behave in a way that maintains the trust the public places in you and in the provision of legal services;
7. comply with your legal and regulatory obligations and deal with your regulators and ombudsmen in an open, timely and co-operative manner;
8. run your business or carry out your role in the business effectively and in accordance with proper governance and sound financial and risk management principles;
9. run your business or carry out your role in the business in a way that encourages equality of opportunity and respect for diversity; and
10. protect client money and assets.

Outcomes are also expressed at a high level of generality, for example, treating your clients fairly<sup>20</sup> or providing services to your clients in a manner which protects their interests in their matter, subject to the proper administration of justice.<sup>21</sup> Indicative behaviours are offered as suggestions for how the mandatory outcomes can be met. This formulation of regulatory text is somewhat different from the old system, where rules were more detailed and compulsory.

This new style of regulation reflects different priorities in the system. In particular, the ambition to be a regulator of ABS, managed and/or owned by non-lawyers, requires that regulation focuses more on organisations. The flexible rulebook will facilitate some shift in regulatory focus from individuals to the employing entity, from detailed forensic investigation of firms' accounts to a system of quality audit and from disciplinary charges to administrative fines. Forensic investigation of a firm's accounts will, on the face of it, be replaced by a kind of quality audit known as 'accreditation',<sup>22</sup> and breaches of rules discovered in the process will be sanctioned by fines.<sup>23</sup> While for law firms these fines are modest, up to £2,000, the SRA may fine ABS £250 million and individuals in ABS up to £50 million. The SRA is concerned to harmonise these regimes.<sup>24</sup>

While the overall regulatory system of discipline may change, the traditional disciplinary mechanism will continue to exist. This means that, for solicitors, a system based on administrative fines, operated by the SRA, will co-exist with a more formal and individually focused disciplinary process operated by the Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal (SDT). The SRA will still prepare cases for the SDT. How the systems will interact is currently being worked through, with some difficulties being discovered. In the longer term it may be, for example, that there will be fewer cases coming through to the SDT and that these will fall into the category of 'more serious' infractions, involving striking off or large fines. The Bar has yet to decide on regulating ABS and need not therefore confront this issue at present.

These changes to the current system do not invalidate this research. In addition to entity regulation, individual lawyers will still be culpable and responsible for their behaviour. It is very likely that the legal professions will need to retain disciplinary tribunals for the foreseeable future. The dispositions and practice of these tribunals will continue to be of contemporary interest as well as historical phenomena.

THE CURRENT DISCIPLINARY SYSTEM

The disciplinary tribunals for solicitors and barristers, the main legal professions, are well established. In the following section we examine firstly the work of the Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal including its caseload, procedures and disposal of cases and then we examine the work of the Bar's Disciplinary Tribunals.

Solicitors

Solicitors are subject to a range of controls. Courts have a summary jurisdiction to punish breaches of the duty to the court.<sup>25</sup> This can cover a wide range of activity from advocacy, conduct of litigation, to claims for costs.<sup>26</sup> Solicitors prosecuted in criminal courts or who break the rules of court may be reported to their professional body by judges and then disciplined for bringing the profession into disrepute. In terms of investigation, disciplinary cases against solicitors arise from a variety of sources. Suspected infraction may be reported when members of the public or other solicitors have suspicions. Some transgressions are identified through random visits to check compliance and through the forensic investigation of files and accounts. Such visits can be triggered by complaints or reported suspicions.

There have been various organisations established by the Law Society to handle complaints against solicitors.<sup>27</sup> The complaints handling record of these bodies have attracted criticism. One critic was the Legal Services Ombudsman, who was charged with reviewing the decisions of professional bodies and who could re-investigate complaints.<sup>28</sup> Complaints against solicitors could result in a range of sanctions, including the making of compensation orders and, when complaints revealed inadequate professional service and professional misconduct, reference to the SDT.

A relatively small proportion of complaints become disciplinary cases. Raw data for complaints handling and disciplinary cases is available, making it possible to track both volumes over a period of time. Between 2000

<sup>26</sup> The SRA informs us that it has twice applied, successfully, to High Court judges for a solicitor to be summarily struck off in the course of existing litigation before that judge, thus avoiding the need for SDT proceedings.

<sup>27</sup> Until 2010 they were investigated by the Legal Complaints Service, a body funded by but independent of the Law Society (the solicitors' professional body). From 6th October 2010 complaints about different kinds of legal services providers were made to the Legal Ombudsman for England and Wales, set up by the Office for Legal Complaints under the Legal Services Act 2007 (see Boon and Levin, supra n.6, Chapter 7).

and 2005 complaints against solicitors averaged nearly 17,000 per annum<sup>29</sup> a figure representing one complaint for every five solicitors. These disciplinary cases are heard by the SDT, which is established under the Solicitors Act 1974 s.46 as a statutory tribunal to “protect the public and to maintain the reputation of the solicitors’ profession for honesty, probity, trustworthiness, independence and integrity.”<sup>30</sup> It hears allegations of professional misconduct by solicitors, registered foreign lawyers and those who are employees of solicitors<sup>31</sup> and hears applications for restoration to the roll.

It has offices in Farringdon Street, London, where hearings are held. Since the enactment of the Legal Services Act 2007 (LSA 2007) the SDT’s administration and financial arrangements have been managed wholly independently from the Law Society. On 29th January 2007, anticipating compulsion under the LSA, the Law Society hived off its disciplinary functions to the SRA. These included the forensic investigation of solicitors’ firms, by review of accounts, files and interview of partners and employees. Such investigations could be routine or ‘triggered’ by complaints or whistle blowers. Suitable cases were presented to the SDT from which appeals are to the High Court.<sup>32</sup> Its administration is run by Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal Administration Limited (SDTA Ltd), a company limited by guarantee controlled by the SDT. The LSA requires the Tribunal to formulate a budget for each forthcoming year for approval by the Legal Services Board and The Law Society is required to pay the specified amount to SDTA Ltd.

The Board of SDTA Ltd. is made up of the Tribunal’s president, who is chairman of the Board, the lay and solicitor vice presidents, a non-executive director and, currently, the immediate past president. Board meetings are held regularly and are attended by the Clerk to the Tribunal (also Company Secretary), its operations manager and its finance officer. Members of the SDT are appointed by a senior judge and the Ministry of Justice and sit in panels of three. The Tribunal currently consists of 53 members, of whom 34 are solicitor members<sup>33</sup> and 19 are lay members drawn from a variety of backgrounds. The Tribunal is staffed by the Clerk, together with a team of deputy clerks. Although the Clerk is, indirectly, paid by the Law Society, the argument that this could lead to an appearance of bias or risk infringement of Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights (right to a fair trial), is no impediment to the clerk advising the tribunal or recording decisions.<sup>34</sup>

We turn now to consider the caseload of the SDT. Between the years 2000 and 2009, the SDT heard an average of around 200 cases a year.<sup>35</sup> These represent less than 0.25% of solicitors holding practising certificates,<sup>36</sup> much less than the volume of complaints. This appears to be because the SDT is reserved for more serious matters. The decisions in the cases suggest as much. On average around 64 solicitors are struck from the roll (disbarred), 38 suspended and 22 reprimanded annually by the SDT. In around ten cases annually no sanction is imposed, apart, possibly, from a costs order.

<sup>31</sup> Section 43 of the Solicitors Act 1974 allows the SRA (as the delegated body of the Law Society) to make an application to the SDT for an order controlling the employment of persons employed or remunerated by a solicitor. The SDT can make an order giving the SRA control of the future employment of such an individual in a solicitor’s practice. Whilst the Order remains in force any solicitor wishing to employ the clerk must first obtain the written consent of the SRA. Only the SRA can bring an application in respect of such persons.

<sup>35</sup> Data from Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal Annual Reports between 2000 and 2009 at <http://www.solicitortribunal.org.uk/about-us/annual-reports> last visited 3rd July 2012. The lowest number was in 2004 (177) and the highest in 2009 (286).

<sup>36</sup> Based on data taken from The Law Society Annual Statistical Reports between 2001 and 2009 at <http://www.lawsociety.org.uk/aboutlawsociety/whatwedo/researchandtrends/statisticalreport.law> last visited 3rd July 2012. The numbers holding practising certificates rose from 82,769 in 2000 to 115,475 in 2009.

The SDT annual report of 2010 records that, in the year to 30th April 2010, the Tribunal sat on 232 hearing days, up from 226 in the previous year.<sup>37</sup> In that same year, 16 appeals against the findings of the SDT were heard by the High Court.<sup>38</sup> Of these nine were dismissed, four were allowed, one was partly upheld, one was withdrawn and one was resolved by agreement.<sup>39</sup> According to a survey of all cases heard substantively during the period 14% were concluded within six months of being filed with the Tribunal.<sup>40</sup> A further 61% were concluded between six months and one year.<sup>41</sup> Forty-five cases in all were outstanding for more than one year.<sup>42</sup>

Moving on to procedures, the Tribunal's procedures are governed by the Solicitors (Disciplinary Proceedings) Rules 2007 (S.I. No. 3588) which came into force on 14th January 2008. Prosecutions occur against a backdrop of a detailed disciplinary code, separate codes on specific areas and practice directions. Additional guidance is often provided alongside the rules. The SDT has wide powers including striking off, suspension and costs orders.

Currently, around 90% of the SDT's caseload is prosecuted by the SRA. Cases must satisfy criteria modelled on those of the Crown Prosecution Service.<sup>43</sup> It has been suggested that these comprise an evidential test and public interest test. As regards evidence, there must be sufficient to provide a "realistic prospect" that a solicitor will be found guilty of misconduct, i.e., that the SDT is more likely than not to make a finding of misconduct. As regards the public interest the SRA will consider whether a finding of misconduct is likely to lead to a fine, suspension or striking off and that there are no public interest factors militating against that course of action. Matters are likely to be referred to the SDT if, for example: there is evidence that the conduct was pre-meditated, repeated, systematic or otherwise dishonest, the solicitor abused a position of authority or trust, a client's or other person's interests have been seriously compromised, or any victim of the misconduct was vulnerable. Whilst it is less likely that the matter will be pursued if: the SDT is likely to impose a nominal penalty, the misconduct resulted from a genuine mistake, the solicitor is elderly and no longer practising, or the solicitor was suffering from significant mental or physical ill health at the time of the misconduct—unless the misconduct was serious or may be repeated.<sup>44</sup> Members of the public can bring a case on their own account.<sup>45</sup> Having the support of the SRA may be a preferred route for individuals because the SRA pays the costs, but it then takes control of the matter.

Next we consider disposal the standard of proof applied by the SDT and by the SRA on disposal of cases. The Solicitors (Disciplinary Proceedings) Rules do not specify the standard of proof applied in the SDT. In 1993 the divisional court held that in cases where the allegations amounted to a criminal offence the criminal standard of proof (beyond reasonable doubt) should apply.<sup>46</sup> In 2005 the Privy Council, hearing an appeal from Trinidad and Tobago, held that the criminal standard of proof was the correct standard for all disciplinary proceedings involving legal professionals.<sup>47</sup> While the Privy Council decision is not binding, it seems clear that the SDT has, in practice, used the criminal standard and that this approach is endorsed by higher courts.<sup>48</sup> In circumstances where it is not clear that the criminal standard of proof has been applied to findings of fact, and where relevant to findings of dishonesty, the court has remitted a case to a differently constituted SDT for re-hearing.<sup>49</sup> The SDT's use of the criminal standard of proof is a higher requirement than the SRA, which has adopted the civil standard of proof (the balance of probabilities). The implications of this are explored further below.

Under the LSA 2007 the SRA was empowered to make findings of breach of regulatory obligations or professional misconduct and to impose sanctions (a written rebuke and penalty of up to £2,000), without reference of cases to the SDT.<sup>50</sup> Consequently, when investigating infractions and making decisions to impose fines, the SRA had to decide what standard of proof it ought to adopt. After a lengthy justification in a supporting paper put to the SRA Board it approved the adoption, in its Disciplinary Procedure Rules,<sup>51</sup> of the civil standard of proof<sup>52</sup> as is common in professional disciplinary tribunals outside the legal profession. In the paper the reasons for adopting the civil standard in applying the new powers to impose low-level fines were:<sup>53</sup>

- A. Disciplinary proceedings are protective and regulatory—liberty is not at stake;
- B. The criminal standard of proof is not appropriate to relatively minor findings of misconduct;
- C. Very serious cases that have a major impact on individual's lives, businesses and livelihoods are taken every day in civil cases by application of the civil standard of proof;
- D. The civil standard is well capable of dealing with serious allegations by what the case law refers to as a need for "heightened examination", to "look closely into the facts grounding an allegation of fraud before accepting that it has been established" and "appropriately careful consideration by the tribunal before it is satisfied of the matter which has to be established";
- E. The SRA and its predecessor bodies have applied the civil standard of proof for many years;
- F. While some may have views about the quality of internal decisions, overall the standard has been applied without significant difficulty or controversy;
- G. Resolving cases by SRA internal decision is more timely and cost-effective for all concerned when compared to prosecuting at the SDT;
- H. The SRA's increasing emphasis on regulation of firms and overall proportionality is likely to be facilitated by the new powers being exercisable;
- I. Requiring the SRA to move from a "balance of probabilities" test to "beyond reasonable doubt" is likely to:
  - Reduce public protection and/or increase public frustration with the disciplinary system;
  - Result in many more referrals from the public and profession being rejected at an early stage because there is no prospect of proof to that standard or because it would be disproportionate to try to prove the allegation to that standard, which would impact on public perception of the ability of the SRA to regulate;
  - Alternatively, result in a need for much more detailed, lengthy and costly investigation to prove allegations for the purposes of an internal sanction.

- J. Although the new powers enable the imposition of fines up to £2,000 and the publication of findings of misconduct resulting in a “rebuke”, there is no inherent objection in principle to findings which lead to the exercise of such powers being reached by application of the civil standard of proof because:
- i. There is a statutory appeal as of right to the SDT against such findings or sanction;
  - ii. The powers are relatively modest in that:
    1. They do not directly endanger a person’s right to practise;
    2. The power to fine is low in itself – in comparison to the SDT’s former power to fine £5,000 per allegation and its new power to levy unlimited fines;
    3. The power to fine is currently interpreted as being potentially a cumulative maximum rather than being exercised for each proved allegation.

Adoption of the civil standard meant that the SRA were applying a lower standard than the SDT. The SDT uses the criminal standard even in cases heard on appeal from an SRA decision.<sup>54</sup> The SRA Board considered this discrepancy. It was put to the Board that the ideal solution was for all parties (the LSB, SDT, SRA and Law Society) to agree a standard of proof to be applied by both the SDT and SRA. The considerations for using a single standard were said to include the fact that “[i]t resolves any inconsistency and...provides transparency both overall and where it is currently lacking in the SDT rules...”<sup>55</sup> Efforts to reach a compromise were unsuccessful. The position therefore remains that where the SRA makes its own disciplinary decision, without reference to the SDT, the civil standard is expressly applied. However, the Solicitors (Disciplinary Proceedings) Rules are silent as to the applicable standard in cases referred to the SDT.

The authority has undertaken not to use its new powers to sanction in cases involving dishonesty, which could result in striking off, thus reducing the chances of inconsistency between SRA and SDT decisions. However (as indicated above), retaining different burdens of proof between the bodies presents some problems. The discrepancy may encourage appeals and ‘forum shopping’ for organisations, like ABS, able to choose their regulators. Also, solicitors potentially subject to disciplinary sanctions may well feel that, where they are on trial for their reputations and livelihoods, it is unfair to apply the civil standard. Alternatively, fines imposed by regulators might be seen as administrative sanctions that are not particularly serious matters. The point about professional disciplinary proceedings is that the process is part of the punishment.<sup>56</sup>

Finally, before the introduction of the Disciplinary Procedure Rules 2011 a relatively new mechanism, a regulatory settlement agreement, was being used by the SRA. These are agreements made between the SRA and the individuals, covering acceptance of the charges and sanctions such as reprimand and payment of costs. The SRA was empowered by the LSA 2007 to impose fines on solicitors without referring the case to the SDT.<sup>57</sup> Under the Disciplinary Procedure Rules 2011, the scope of these agreements was extended to cover payments to clients and fines.<sup>58</sup>

Barristers

The Bar uses different procedures from the SRA. The Bar Standards Board (BSB) formally refers cases to a disciplinary tribunal, i.e., it operates as the prosecuting body.<sup>59</sup> Bar disciplinary tribunals are arranged by an independent organisation called the Bar Tribunal and Adjudication Service (BTAS), which also appoints the members of disciplinary tribunals and arranges hearings.<sup>60</sup> There are two types of disciplinary tribunal panels (a three person and a five person), which are set up according to the gravity of the charges.<sup>61</sup> Tribunal panels are drawn from barristers and judges and all panels include at least one layperson. All panels follow the same process but the sentencing powers are slightly different. The panels apply the criminal standard of proof when adjudicating professional misconduct charges.<sup>62</sup>

A three-person tribunal panel is made up of a chair, usually Queen's Counsel but occasionally a judge, a barrister member and a layperson. A five-person tribunal panel is made up of a chair, who is a judge, two barristers and two lay people. Table 1 below compares the sanctions the tribunal panels can impose where they consider that there has been professional misconduct.

The consultation closes 6th September 2013.

If disciplinary tribunal panel charges are upheld, the barrister can appeal against the decision and/or sentence to the independent Visitors of the Inns of Court.<sup>64</sup> Also, the BSB can appeal to the Visitors against sentence and can appeal if the charges have been dismissed but, in both cases, only if the Chair of the BSB or the Chair of the Complaints Committee agrees. Moreover, where the tribunals consider that professional misconduct has not been proved but breach of provision(s) of the Barristers Code of Conduct<sup>65</sup> have been found, the barrister can again appeal.<sup>66</sup>

THE PROJECT

Focus and Objectives

The project investigated disciplinary proceedings against lawyers in order to identify factors associated with transgression. It was inspired by Richard Abel's book, Lawyers in the Dock, reviewing disciplinary proceedings against six attorneys in the US,<sup>67</sup> which sparked international interest and comment on the disciplinary component of professional regulation.<sup>68</sup> Abel's case studies point to situational factors associated with transgression, like sole practice, with the associated lack of financial and other material support.<sup>69</sup>

While Abel's study approaches disciplinary cases from a qualitative perspective, it is not possible to say how representative are the cases that he presents, and infer from that the possible prevalence of specific types. It is important therefore to combine quantitative and qualitative approaches in order to reach a better understanding of lawyer disciplinary processes.

Abel's work focuses on what could be described as underlying issues in lawyer transgression, such as the types of law practice that give rise to the most offences and the factors explaining infraction. He uses structured variables of firm clientele and subject matter and biography (history and character). This opens up the field of enquiry into motives, pressures and support of delinquent lawyers.

From the wider academic point of view, white-collar crime is under-studied and under-theorised. Shapiro calls for increased effort to understand the "... distribution of structural opportunities for trust abuse with an understanding of the conditions under which individual or organizational fiduciaries seize or ignore these illicit opportunities."<sup>70</sup> This gives our study a wider relevance; lawyers are an archetypal white-collar occupation, but also one that trades on its ethical commitment, individual and collective, in the market place.

Our principal aim was to develop and test methods for the analysis and understanding of how professional transgression occurs in the legal professions, the factors giving rise to it and how those professions respond to it. Our primary aim was not to generate useful data for analysis, but to investigate how this could be done using information already in the public sphere, namely, the transcripts of disciplinary proceedings against solicitors and barristers.

We therefore set ourselves a number of objectives, firstly to develop a research framework for the investigation of lawyer disciplinary proceedings. This considered the review of a sample of transcripts from disciplinary tribunals (in the form of a pilot study), the conduct of a case study and the conduct of a small number of interviews. Secondly we sought to develop methods to collect and analyse available quantitative data. Here we considered methods used by the SDT and by others conducting similar research and how they could inform our method of analysis. Next we wanted to identify the influential factors in lawyers' transgression, which was done by considering a theoretical framework. And finally we sought to identify any patterns in tribunals' disposition of cases, which was done by analysing our empirical findings. The next section presents our findings and a discussion of these objectives.

Theory, Method and Discussion

Pilot Study of Disciplinary Transcripts

As indicated above, in terms of developing a research framework for investigating lawyer disciplinary proceedings we proposed a pilot study examining in detail a full year of disciplinary transcripts for the period prior to the commencement of the research; in the event we chose the calendar year 2008, because we had already obtained the transcripts for that period. Since the regulators already publish statistics relating to disciplinary processes, the purpose was to discover what additional information was available from transcripts to inform analysis of the inputs and outputs of disciplinary tribunal processes.

We reviewed a sample of the transcripts in order to discover what kind of information is consistently available. In transcripts from the SDT a number of useful details were consistently mentioned, for example, the respondent's gender, date of birth and date of admission to the Roll,<sup>71</sup> plus the firm to which they belonged. As regards process; charges, evidence, findings and sanctions were recorded in detail. Some potentially useful information in terms of analysing the circumstances of or potentially significant factors in transgression, were not recorded. Therefore, the ethnic origin of respondents (which is sensitive personal data), the size of firms to which respondents belonged (except where respondents were noted to be sole practitioners) and the number of partners in those firms, were not consistently recorded.

By comparison, transcripts published by the BDT are summary in nature. For more information on the details of the disciplinary hearing/full transcripts, one would have to contact the BSB's Investigation and Hearing Team<sup>72</sup> but it was not possible to obtain this detail within the time frame of the project. However, the summary transcripts consistently contain information on the barrister's name, employment status (i.e., self-employed, employed etc.), name and address of Chambers (assuming the barrister was self-employed), the findings and sentence, the date the decision was made and the status of the decision.<sup>73</sup> In contrast, information on date of birth, the context in which the charges were brought and any mitigation or defence put forward by barristers are not provided. And, similar to the SDT transcripts, the ethnic origin of barrister respondents and the size and type of chambers or organisation from which they worked, were not consistently recorded.

Other categories of information were more ambiguous. For example, we thought that it would be important to track the process by which the respondents came before the Tribunals, i.e., how did the infraction come to the knowledge of the regulator? This information is potentially important because it suggests the relative effectiveness or importance of different sources of referral. It proved difficult to identify the source of the reference from the transcripts because they often fail to provide the reason for the initial interest in the firm or barrister. So, for instance, details were given of investigations of solicitors' books of account by a Forensic Officer (FO) but not why the FO attended the firm in the first instance, i.e. what sparked the initial interest in the firm's practice.

In relation to some of the pieces of information not recorded in the disciplinary transcripts we were able to draw some very rough inferences from other sources. For example, we tried to check the status of firms in 2008 using Chambers and Partners Guide to the UK Legal Profession, but very few of the named firms were listed there. We then checked all the names on the Law Society website of contemporary law firms.<sup>74</sup> Similarly we checked the Bar Directory<sup>75</sup> for the current employment status of the barrister respondents. While this process is four years later than the date when the cases were heard, we thought that, in most cases, changes in structure would probably not be very significant. In any event, taking the data in the round, any unreliability in the data would be offset by the importance of getting a preliminary take on the relationship between organisation type and respondents before the Tribunals.

<sup>73</sup> See <http://www.barstandardsboard.rroom.net/complaintsofprofessionalmisconduct/publisheddisciplinaryfindings> last visited 28th June 2012. Each set of findings is accorded a status: "Open to Appeal - The case is within the period that a barrister can appeal the finding but no appeal has been submitted; Appeal Pending (sentence stayed)—The barrister has submitted an appeal, which is yet to be heard and Final—The finding has been pronounced either after the appeal period has expired or following the result of an appeal." Ibid.

The Case Study

We also proposed to consider a small number of notable cases for more detailed analysis, as a means of developing a research framework for investigating lawyer disciplinary proceedings. The case study selected was the miners' costs scandal, which, despite considerable notoriety, has not been the subject of academic analysis.<sup>76</sup> The scandal led to one of the largest investigations of a single issue ever mounted by a legal regulator. By May 2009, 38 solicitors from 11 firms had been before the SDT and a further 68 cases involving solicitors from 14 firms were due to be heard. According to information provided by the SRA to the Ministry of Justice, 115 solicitors in 25 firms were eventually referred to the SDT in connection with the miners' costs scandal.<sup>77</sup> These cases were a key part of the SDT's caseload during our period of investigation (calendar year 2008) and we therefore decided to track them beyond this period. The individual case selected to feature in the case study, concerning two partners in Avalon Solicitors (Warrington, Cheshire), first came before the SDT in 2008, but was not finally heard until 2009.

SDT hearings of disciplinary cases against solicitors arising out of the miners' compensation cases began in 2006 and ended in 2010. As a result of these hearings three solicitors were struck off and three suspended for periods of between six months and four years. Forty-seven solicitors were fined<sup>78</sup> and six were reprimanded. A handful was either not pursued or the allegations were withdrawn.<sup>79</sup> Of the solicitors charged, regulatory settlement agreements were entered into with three firms covering 16 solicitors in these firms and in two of these cases the details were approved by the SDT. A regulatory settlement was also entered into with a fourth firm, Thompsons (the national personal injury specialists), on 30th September 2010, covering six partners, including the chief executive.<sup>80</sup>

The basis for discipline is also worth comment. In most of the cases before the SDT involving coal health firms the implication of the decision is that there was not merely a technical breach of the rules, but that such breaches constituted cheating of clients and therefore a betrayal of trust. Cheating is a broad category of white-collar crime,<sup>81</sup> not an offence in its own right, but describing something that is an offence, like insider trading. Cheating is the violation of rules in order to take advantage of someone with whom one is in a cooperative relationship.<sup>82</sup> While such a betrayal of trust is probably a useful rule of thumb for laying disciplinary charges, striking off requires more. As with findings of criminality, there is usually a requirement of moral wrongdoing,<sup>83</sup> such as dishonesty. A solicitor not disclosing to his partners that he has an interest in a claims management company<sup>84</sup> is an example of dishonesty worthy of striking off, as are all but trivial cases involving dishonesty.<sup>85</sup>

It is likely that further funding will be sought in order to extend this work.

Interviews

Finally, we proposed to conduct a small number of interviews with key players to consider the implications of our research and inform the development of a research framework for the investigating lawyer disciplinary proceedings. Despite requests to the SRA and the BSB it proved difficult to obtain co-operation on interviews. We were able to interview the chief clerk to the SDT and Chief Executive of SDT Administration Limited but were discouraged from interviewing tribunal chairs. We were also able to interview a lawyer in connection with the case study. Towards the deadline for submission of this research report, we had a late reply from a key official at one of the main regulators and managed to meet just before the deadline.

Data Collection Methods and Analysis

Our second objective was to consider methods of collecting, collating and analysing available quantitative data on lawyer infraction. One of our principle areas of concern here was to establish a method for reliably and usefully coding charges and outcomes. Using data collected from disciplinary tribunal transcripts we considered various approaches to coding charges and outcomes. For example that used by the SDT in its annual reports and that used by Haller in her analysis of the outcome of disciplinary hearings in Queensland, Australia, between 1930 and 2000.<sup>87</sup> We could have emulated the classification of offences, which the SDT uses in its annual reports and as set out in Table 2 below.

<sup>88</sup> See, for example, Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal Annual Report 2011-2012, pp.15-16 at <http://www.solicitortribunal.org.uk/Content/documents/Annual%20Report%202011-2012%20final.pdf> last visited 20th August 2013. The offences are framed in different ways, which are then broadly categorized in the seven groups and which appear to be listed in order of severity of offence.

		<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Breach of Legal Aid Regulations</li> <li>• Breach of Solicitors Introduction &amp; Referral Code 1990</li> <li>• Breach of Solicitors Publicity Code 1990 &amp; 2001</li> </ul>

However, we found these categories useful to give the big picture of the tribunal's work but potentially not sufficient data points for regression analysis. The categories are too broad to allow detailed exploration of relationships between variables, for instance, to establish a relationship between a particular type of failure, like failure to comply with an undertaking, and a particular outcome, like imposition of a fine as opposed to a suspension.

In contrast, Haller used a more complex model for analysing the outcomes of disciplinary hearings in Queensland. In her research 81 individual charge types were collated and collapsed into ten categories of charge as reproduced in Table 3 below:

CATEGORY	CHARGE
1	Trust fund violations
2	Misleading or dishonest conduct
3	Conflict of interest
4	Ethics
5	Compliance with Law Society rules, orders or requests
6	Quality of service
7	Documents
8	Costs agreement infractions
9	Costs / Bills
10	Communication

Haller's database then provided another column of the common charge types within each category and a further column for details about the particular offence.<sup>90</sup> We decided that this model was too detailed for the purpose of this research, particularly since we were working with one year of data only and our purpose was to determine what information was available, what could be usefully added by research and what broad patterns this would reveal. A variation of Haller's model could be used for research of patterns over a longer period.

For the project, using the disciplinary tribunal transcripts, we categorised the charge based on the rule, guide, code or statute under which it was brought. This gave us a total of eleven categories and a broad picture of the types of charges brought (like, but more detailed than, the SDT categorisation). Within each <sup>89</sup> Adapted from Haller, supra n.87, Appendix 2, pp.43-45. Note Haller numbered the charges in the order that they were listed in the disciplinary tribunal decisions; see ibid pp.7-8 rather than in order of severity (as in Table 3 above).

Despite this breakdown and the fact that in relation to most data items, classification was not problematic (for example, the date of birth of solicitor respondents and the date of a solicitor's admission to the Roll or a barrister's call,<sup>91</sup> plus the gender of respondents); the analysis and coding of cases was far more time consuming than anticipated.

<sup>91</sup> The Roll is the term given to the register of qualified solicitors practising in England and Wales. The date of call is the "date at which a barrister is formally recognised to have passed the vocational stage of training and has been admitted to the Bar (being, at the Bar is the term used to describe the profession of being a barrister" J. Sauboorah (2011) Trends in the Barristers' Profession: Pilot Statistical Report The Bar Standards Board and the General Council of the Bar, p.38 at http://www.legalservicesboard.org.uk/what\_we\_do/consultations/closed/pdf/annex\_b.pdf last visited 30th June 2012.

The dataset we used for the statistical analysis of solicitors' infraction comprised all 189 cases brought before the Solicitors' Disciplinary Tribunal (SDT) in 2008.<sup>92</sup> The total number of cases analysed was 279, this figure differs because hearings counted as one by the Tribunal were entered onto the research database as separate cases where separate solicitors were involved. For example, the largest case in the sample involved 12 solicitors from one firm,<sup>93</sup> hence there were 12 entries made onto the database. None of the cases brought were excluded from the analysis save where cases were severed and action was brought against the severed party outside the year under analysis.<sup>94</sup>

The dataset we used for the statistical analysis of barristers' infraction comprised, in first instance, all 75 cases brought before the Bar's Disciplinary Tribunal (BDT) in 2008. The cases were brought against 73 barristers, with two barristers appearing twice.<sup>95</sup> Detailed analysis was only possible for 27 of these cases. This is because, in accordance with The Bar's policy on publication of findings, after a period of two years it removes note of all disciplinary hearings which resulted in findings other than disbarment or suspension.<sup>96</sup> So where the finding involves disbarment or a period of suspension, its posting to the BSBs website is permanent.<sup>97</sup> Moreover, the transcripts, which remain posted, are summary in nature when compared to those of the SDT.<sup>98</sup>

Having established the data set we then considered the structure of the database and the tools for analysing it. The Statistical Package for Social Scientists, IBM SPSS 19, was used to analyse the information on solicitor infraction. Each line of the database represented one SDT case against one respondent and contained variables as listed in Appendix 1. All the variable information was taken from the SDT reports of hearings save for the current status of the individual involved and the firm from which they practiced.<sup>99</sup> This information was obtained from the Law Society's 'Find a Solicitor / Law Firm' database<sup>100</sup> and supplemented by general search of the web.<sup>101</sup> The variables were categorised, coded and recoded to allow the information to be collapsed and combined for ease of interpretation. For instance, the data entered onto SPSS re the geographic location of the firm at which the respondent worked, was entered in its entirety but then recoded into a region, e.g., Gateshead, Liverpool became North West.<sup>102</sup> Likewise a solicitor respondent's status was initially entered as described in the SDT report and later recoded into fewer, broader categories such as "partner or equivalent" and "solicitor or equivalent" to encompass senior partners, equity partners directors etc., assistant solicitors, associate solicitors and so on (for full details of this coding see Appendix 2).

Due to the limited number of BDT reports available to us it proved swifter to analyse the information on barrister infraction using Excel. The structure of the excel sheet accorded to the information provided by the Bar's published findings, i.e., the barrister's name, employment status and so on.<sup>103</sup>

As declared, our third objective was to identify the influential factors in lawyer's transgression. This we did by constructing a theoretical framework as explained in the following section.

Our Theoretical Framework

Abel discovered that the professional discipline issues are relatively under-researched, a fact he attributed to the aura of secrecy formally surrounding disciplinary processes.<sup>104</sup> His conclusions, based on review of the existing literature, suggest that sole practitioners and small firm lawyers are disproportionately represented in lawyer disciplinary cases.<sup>105</sup> This means that examples of cases brought before disciplinary tribunals often seem to be relatively small scale. When lawyers are disciplined for repeated infractions, these often result from ignorance, indifference or inattention.<sup>106</sup> This may also be why; in general, examples of disciplinary infractions are individual, 'unique and unrepeatable'.<sup>107</sup>

In terms of theory, Abel drew extensively on the literature on 'white-collar crime'. This is a better fit than first appears, despite the fact that professional disciplinary infractions are rarely prosecuted as criminal acts. Criminology is relevant because it focuses on the conditions that encourage crime and the psychology of perpetrators. Sutherland coined the term 'white collar crime' in 1939 to challenge the myth that deviance was the preserve of the lower classes.<sup>108</sup> He argued that prosecutions may not be brought, or fail and that accurate statistics would be far more damning of elites.<sup>109</sup>

Following Sutherland, later theorists assert that deviance results from a coincidence of motivation and opportunity, the attractiveness of the latter being determined by prospective gains, potential risks, the compatibility with ideas, beliefs and rationalizations and any other available opportunities (the actor's opportunity structure).<sup>110</sup> This does not explain why some succumb to temptation, but one of the few commonplaces of criminology is that those involved in one type of illegitimate activity are more likely to be involved in others.<sup>111</sup>

Coleman suggests we need only acknowledge that wealth and success are the central goals of human endeavour to find motive for deviance.<sup>112</sup> The 'culture of competition' fuelled by capitalism causes blurry lines between entrepreneurship, commercial innovation and deviant activity. Social inequality causes crime at both ends of the social scale; poor people feel powerless and exploited and the wealthy feel that power and exploitation are legitimate.<sup>113</sup> For some, the outcome is its own justification; only 'the most capable and the hardest-working individuals emerge victorious'.<sup>114</sup>

One theory of financial motivation transcends need. Wheeler suggests that some people stop acquiring wealth at a certain level, whereas, for others, utility grows at higher levels of wealth acquisition.<sup>115</sup> Actors operating in high risk taking are more likely to see themselves “... as pitting their wits against those of the system in some very high stakes games.”<sup>116</sup> Acquisition of wealth at these higher levels may ‘take the form of a true pathology of personality—a person oblivious of the pattern though engaged in it’.<sup>117</sup> Often, such a person is totally unprepared for being caught and ‘treated like a criminal’. There may be some resonance here with Abel’s suggestion that a striking trait shared by the lawyers in Lawyers in the Dock is the belief they are above the law.<sup>118</sup> Some behaviour is consistent with ‘neutralisation strategies’ used to rationalize and therefore limit symbolic constraints on behaviour.<sup>119</sup> Coleman identifies six groups of strategy used by individuals charged with white-collar offences to justify their actions.<sup>120</sup>

Organisations are of interest in considering the field of lawyer discipline, not only because they can be a vehicle for deviance but because of the possibility that they can be used to motivate ‘good people to do dirty work’.<sup>121</sup> This raises questions about the impact of the regulatory environment on firms’ behaviour<sup>122</sup> and whether pressures towards deviance are counter-balanced, for example, by rewards and punishments. The role of organisations in studying professional deviance is somewhat underplayed, partly because examples of prosecution are seldom of people controlling significant operations.<sup>123</sup>

In the coal health cases the business practices which led to discipline were sometimes said to be widespread, open and broadly accepted as legitimate in the professional community and to some extent they were. The way they were operated were not, although consensus on where the line should be drawn emerged rather late in the day. The worst cases in the miners’ costs scandal revolved around the abuse of conditional fee arrangements (CFA). In the Lopian Wagner case, the SDT noted that only 14 of the 44 firms investigated had entered into CFAs and/or contingency fee agreements with clients whereby the firm retained fees in addition to those paid by the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI).<sup>124</sup> The Tribunal was concerned to see that letters sent to clients clearly failed to inform clients of costs that would be paid by the DTI. Miners should have been told that other solicitors would have dealt with the claims without deducting success fees.<sup>125</sup>

As the final objective we sought to identify any patterns in the tribunal’s dispositions of disciplinary cases. For this we adopted an empirical method based on the transcripts from the disciplinary tribunals and our findings are discussed below.

EMPIRICAL FINDINGS<sup>126</sup>

Our empirical findings sought to develop a picture of the reasons behind tribunal investigations, the type of respondents who find themselves before their tribunal (in terms of sex and ethnicity, age, experience and status), the type of organisation from which respondents practice and the location of that organisation, the most prevalent charges brought against respondents and the success or failure of the charges (i.e., the result of the disciplinary hearing), as well as the defences and mitigations put forward by respondents. Our analysis also took account of any previous appearances respondents had before their tribunal. The findings are presented below in this order. And go toward proving the theory, as suggested by Abel and others, that the typical transgressor is a sole practitioner, from a small firm ignorant, indifferent or inattentive of the rules and regulations governing professional behaviour.

Investigation

Though the transcripts were not always clear on what triggered the disciplinary action, we formulated some broad categories (which we called context) for the reasons why respondents found themselves in front of the SDT and these are as listed in Appendix 3. We learned that in many cases (40.5%  $\approx$  n 113) this was the result of inspections by the Law Society, which were usually, it seems, triggered by information received.<sup>127</sup> In other cases (c 23%  $\approx$  n 64) referral clearly originated in a complaint lodged with a complaints body, such as the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors by, for example, a member of the public or a fellow solicitor.<sup>128</sup> These findings are, in large part, confirmed by the SDT annual reports, which provide the big picture on the origin of referrals.<sup>129</sup> According to the reports, applications for inquiry into a solicitor's conduct are largely confined to the Law Society (through the SRA) and though it is also open to members of the public to make direct applications to the SDT without reporting to the Law Society, they rarely do.<sup>130</sup>

Due to the summary nature of the BDT reports, it was not possible to formulate categories for the reasons barristers found themselves before their Tribunal; the reports do not contain this information.

Sex, Race and Ethnicity

There was a gender distribution in favour of male respondents appearing before the SDT, that is 225 (80.6%) compared to 54 (19.4%) females. This imbalance is more notable given that, in 2008, women constituted 44.4% of solicitors holding practising certificates.<sup>131</sup> It is not possible to provide any statistical analysis on the race and ethnic origin of respondents before the tribunal as the SDT reports rarely contain this information. Indeed from the reports it was possible to glean information on the ethnic origin of only nine <sup>126</sup> All percentages cited in this section of the report are valid percentages, i.e., excluding missing information. For an early statistical investigation into the findings of the SDT see M. Davies 'The Regulation of Solicitors and the Role of the Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal' (1998) 14:3 Professional Negligence 15.

<sup>127</sup> Note, it is now the SRA which has responsibility for most referrals/prosecutions brought before the SDT (<http://www.sra.org.uk/SDT>). The governing rules for SRA referral may be found at <http://www.sra.org.uk/solicitors/enforcement/intervention-tribunal/sdt-referral-code.page> and should be read in conjunction with rule 10 of the SRA Disciplinary Procedure Rules at (<http://www.sra.org.uk/solicitors/handbook/discproc/content.page>). All sites last visited 4th July 2012.

<sup>128</sup> Other reasons included referrals following: a criminal conviction (7.2%  $\pm$  n.20), a targeted audit (6.8%  $\pm$  n.47) and a 'tip-off' (3.9%  $\pm$  n.22).

<sup>129</sup> See, the SDT annual reports at <http://www.solicitortribunal.org.uk/about-us/annual-reports> last visited 19th July 2013 and The Chairman's Report of The Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal 2013 p.5 at http://www.distrib.ie/documents/Solicitors\_Disciplinary\_Tribunal\_CMS11.pdf last visited 19th July 2013.

<sup>130</sup> Of the applications made in the year ending 30th April 2011, four were made directly by members of the public (the SDT found no case to answer) and 16 concerned restoration to the roll, or the revocation of a s.43 Order (an application to control the employment of a person employed or remunerated by a solicitor). The balance of 207 comprised applications by the Law Society (through the SRA), see Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal Annual Report 2010-2011 p.10 at <http://www.solicitortribunal.org.uk/Content/documents/Annual%20Report%202010-2011%20Final.pdf> last visited 19th July 2013.

of the 279 respondents brought before the SDT in 2008.<sup>132</sup> Moreover, the Law Society's "Find a Solicitor" database does not record such details.

From the BDTs summary reports it is not always obvious whether the barrister brought before the Tribunal was male or female, as the reports do not use the titles Mr, Miss or the personal pronouns 'she or he'. Instead, respondents are referred to by their full name or as 'the barrister'. Where sex was not obvious from the barrister's name or the report, we checked the Bar's Directory.<sup>133</sup> Thus in 2008 of the 73 cases brought before the BDT, 72.6% (n 53) involved men and 37.7% (n 20) involved women; again a gender distribution in favour of male respondents. These figures should be viewed in context. The percentage of women at the bar is smaller than men. In 2009-10 women made up 34.4% (n 5,259) of the practising bar; that is 5,259 women to 10,011 men.<sup>134</sup> As with the SDT reports, neither the BDT reports nor the Bar Directory include information on the race and ethnicity of respondents.<sup>135</sup>

As the transcripts contain little to no information on the race or ethnicity of respondents it was not possible to use them to research the possibility of a link between racial diversity and transgression as determined by the SDT. External (and internal) research<sup>136</sup> has, however, been conducted into potential racial bias in the regulatory and disciplinary decisions of the SRA, including the decision to refer a case to the SDT. In the main it is the SRA that makes referrals to the SDT<sup>137</sup> and as a result of the Authority's decision a disproportionate number of respondents of Black, Asian or Minority Ethnic (BAME) background may find themselves before the Tribunal. This issue of race, regulation and wrongdoing has recently been thrown into the spotlight of a wider audience due to the case of Robinson v Solicitors Regulation Authority.<sup>138</sup>

Robinson, a sole practitioner of African Caribbean origin argued that the SRA and SDT had discriminated against him on racial grounds. Thus he sought to appeal the SDT's reasoning, decision and 12 months suspension on the basis of racial bias; claiming that when viewed through the "prism of racial discrimination" the tribunal's decision was unfair.<sup>139</sup> The High court detected nothing

<sup>135</sup> However, in addition to the annual monitoring of equality and diversity that the SRA conducts (<http://www.sra.org.uk/sra/equality-diversity/reports.page>) it has commissioned external research into the relationship between race and regulation see: Pearn Kandola (2010) Solicitors Regulation Authority Commissioned Research into Issues of Disproportionality at <http://www.sra.org.uk/sra/equality-diversity/reports/research-disproportionality.page>, Ouseley Report (2008) Independent Review into Disproportionate Regulatory Outcomes For Black and Minority Ethnic Solicitors at <http://www.sra.org.uk/ouseley> and The Law Society Report (2006) The Impact of Regulatory Decisions of the Investigations and Enforcement Unit on Black and Minority Ethnic Solicitors at <http://www.sra.org.uk/documents/sra/equality-diversity/bme-impact06.pdf>. Moreover, the SRA currently awaits a report from Professor Gus John, an equality and race relations expert, who has been tasked with an Independent Comparative Case Law Review to investigate potential racial bias in the disciplinary decisions the SRA makes (<http://www.sra.org.uk/sra/equality-diversity/reports/independent-comparative-case-review.page> last visited 17th July 2013). The BSB has not escaped questions over racial bias in its complaints and discipline processes. Biennially it publishes survey reports on the gender and ethnicity of barristers subject to complaints (<http://www.barstandardsboard.org.uk/about-bar-standards-board/how-we-do-it/our-staff/professional-conduct-department/performance-reports/diversity-reports> last visited 17th July 2013). The 2013 report contains detailed analysis of complaints data from 2007-2011, see Bar Standards Board (2012) Report on Diversity of Barristers Subject to Complaints 2013 at http://www.barstandardsboard.org.uk/media/151930/diversity\_report\_2012\_report.pdf last visited 17th July 2013. The Board has also commissioned an independent external qualitative review of its complaints processes, the results of which are due in September 2103, see <http://www.barstandardsboard.org.uk/media-centre/press-releases/diversity-review-of-complaints-processes> last visited 17th July 2013.

<sup>139</sup> [2012] EWHC 2690 (Admin) para.40. Robinson's counsel made reference to the commissioned reports into race and regulation in order to support the allegation of discrimination, ibid para.59 (and see The Law Society, Ouseley and Kandola reports n.135).

...to suggest that any wider issues regarding alleged discrimination in the legal profession have somehow seeped into, or otherwise materially affected, the Tribunal's reasoning or decision in the instant case. No scintilla of discrimination of any kind is detectable, save against bad practice by a solicitor contrary to his professional code of conduct... [T]he Tribunal's reasons are a model of their kind and unimpeachable.<sup>140</sup>

Despite this, and as Webley points out, the case "...raise[s] broader issues about the way in which apparent breaches of legal ethics and code compliance are brought to the attention of the regulator and are investigated and decided."<sup>141</sup> She identifies, and we agree that there is, a "complex matrix of intersecting factors" which make-up the picture of racial disproportionality before the regulators; Webley goes on to suggest the need for further research.<sup>142</sup>

The BSB has not escaped questions over racial bias in its complaints and discipline processes and, like the SRA, has published reports and commissioned research into the diversity of barristers subject to complaints.<sup>143</sup> But current legal action<sup>144</sup> and media attention<sup>145</sup> spotlight the failures of its disciplinary tribunals as they pertain to "systematic failures" in administration, rather than discrimination.<sup>146</sup>

Age, Experience and Status

At the time of the SDT hearing the mean age of men was 50.16 years and women 44.98 years. This is considerably older than the comparative mean age of men and women holding practising certificates in 2008, with men at 44.3 years and women 37.1 years.<sup>147</sup> Across the sexes the minimum age at hearing was 28, the maximum 71 and the mean 49.16.<sup>148</sup> So every age and sex has its share of transgressors as can be seen in Figure 1, which reflects the age of respondents across the sexes.

<sup>142</sup> Including: the fact that the SRA receives many of its complaints from external sources; that BAME respondents are more likely to work as sole practitioners or in small practices doing the type of work which is highly scrutinised by the regulators with limited resources in terms of management and administrative structure, and of supportive colleagues wrapped up in a lack of trust BAME may have in their regulator, see Webley supra n.138, p.241.

<sup>148</sup> The minimum age of a male before the SDT was 29 years and a female 28 contrasted with the oldest male being 72 and the oldest female, 66. Of the 279 dataset information with regard to date of birth was missing in 45 cases, i.e., 16.1%.

Knowledge of age on its own means little unless we also know the number of years post qualification experience (PQE) a respondent has, because age does not necessarily mean experience. For example, a respondent could have obtained legal qualification at 48 and been practising for two years when brought before the tribunal at age 50. In our sample the mean number of years post qualification experience (PQE) was 19.63. The minimum number of years was one and the maximum 48. The mode was shared between seven years and 28 years PQE. These numbers are represented in Figure 2 below:

Bearing in mind age, and years of PQE, it is understandable that most solicitor respondents had achieved partner status or equivalent by the time of their hearing (n 155 ≈ 56.2%). The next largest group comprised sole practitioners (n 67  $\approx$  24.3%), followed by solicitors or equivalent (n 37  $\approx$  13.4%).<sup>149</sup> So rather than young and inexperienced solicitors' being brought up before the SDT, our data suggests that it is middle-aged male solicitors, who have reached partnership and have almost 20 years post qualification experience, who make the most appearances.<sup>150</sup>

This preponderance of middle-aged solicitors before the SDT may be because solicitors are feeling pressure from a number of sources including partnership breakdown, ill health, over stretched financial resources and hectic family life.<sup>151</sup> These are ideal sets of circumstances in which errors, misjudgements, bad choices and risk taking may occur, accumulate and lead to disciplinary transgressions. It is noteworthy that the issue of risk taking is one that the SRA is currently focussing upon as it matures into its role as an outcome focussed risk-based regulator.<sup>152</sup> By contrast, assistant and associate solicitors<sup>153</sup> may be more up to date with the governing rules and available technology. They may also be less jaded by the profession and its pressures. Moreover, assistant and associate solicitors do not enjoy the same freedom from internal supervision that partners and sole practitioners do, the level of supervision they are subject to may lessen their opportunities for misconduct. Consequently, these are circumstances in which perhaps less disciplinary mistakes occur.

When the current status of respondents was examined using the Law Society's "Find a Solicitor" database, it was found that, four years on, only 40% still remained in legal practice.<sup>154</sup> This can part way be explained by the fact that 48 ( $\approx$  17.2%) of the respondents were struck off and 39 ( $\approx$  16.7%) were in their 60s and 70s and may therefore have retired from the profession.

As previously indicated, the BDT summary reports do not contain information on the age of respondents but do list the month and year of call.<sup>155</sup> This allowed us to ascertain that the majority of barristers were self-employed (n 37  $\approx$  50.7%), a fair number were non-practising (n 14  $\approx$  19.2%), and the remaining few were employed (n 8  $\approx$  11%) or unregistered (n 3  $\approx$  4.1%).<sup>156</sup> There was only one QC in the sample of 40 years call (12 of these years as Silk).<sup>157</sup> The pie chart, in Figure 3 below, shows these percentages visually for ease of comparing proportions.

<sup>149</sup> There were 13 (4.7%) paralegals / equivalent, two trainees, one barrister and one legal executive. Paralegal and legal executive have not been used as synonymous categories. As a qualified member of the Institute of Legal Executives, legal executives were treated as separate entities. This totals 276 with missing information on three respondents.

<sup>152</sup> The SRA has recently published its first annual assessment of risk to the profession, which it categorises into three types, current (such as financial instability), emerging (such as poor standards or service and advice) and potential (such as lack of due diligence in outsourcing), see Solicitors Regulation Authority (2013) Risk Outlook 2013: The SRA's Assessment of Key Risks to the Regulatory Objectives at <http://www.sra.org.uk/solicitors/freedom-in-practice/ofr/risk/risk-outlook.page> last visited 19th July 2013.

<sup>153</sup> Assistants and associates were underrepresented in the SDT 2008 sample by comparison to the population of the Law Society's ASR for the same year. Solicitors or equivalent made up 13.4% of the SDT hearings in 2008. Whereas Associate and Assistant Solicitors (14,682 (17.6%) and 25,967 (31.2%) respectively) made up 48% of solicitors in private practice holding practising certificates as of July 2008, see Cole, supra n.131 at p.15.

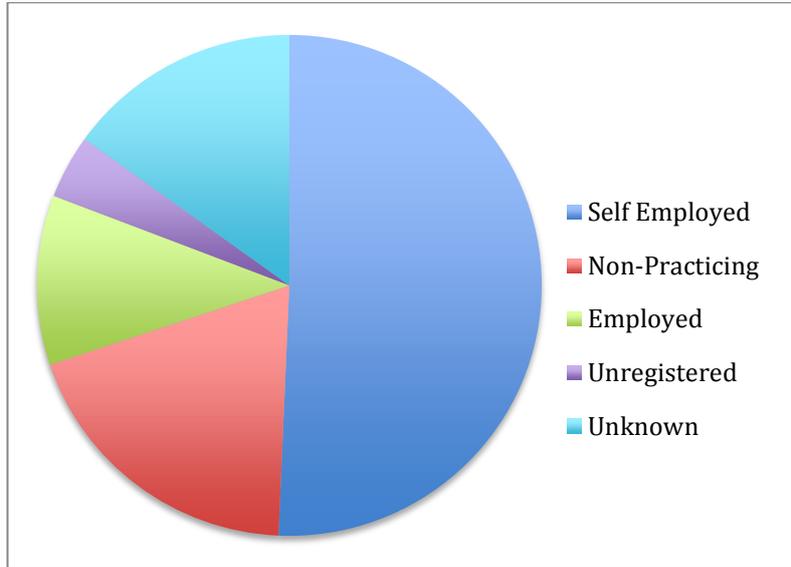

<sup>154</sup> This database, <http://www.lawsociety.org.uk/choosingandusing/findasolicitor/view=solsearch.law> was consulted in November and December 2011.

<sup>155</sup> Where summary reports were unavailable, data on date of call and the status of the barrister in terms of employment, was found using the Bar Directory at <http://www.legalhub.co.uk> last visited 28th June 2012.

<sup>156</sup> Data was missing in 11 (15.5%) of the 73 cases.

We also ascertained that at the time of the BDT hearing the mean number of years call for male barristers was 17.4 and women 14.9. Across the sexes the minimum number of years call was two, the maximum 45, the mean 16.72 and the mode 16 (Figure 4 illustrates the number of years across the sexes).<sup>158</sup> So again, as with solicitors, it is experienced barristers who are finding themselves before their regulator.

<sup>158</sup> The minimum years of call for males were two and females six, contrasted with the maximum years call for males at 45 and females at 40. Of the full 73 case dataset, information with regard to years of call was missing in 11 cases, i.e., 15.5%.

We can make a rough educated guess as to the average age of barristers appearing before the Tribunal, by assuming they were called to the bar having completed their vocational legal training at around 22-23 years old.<sup>159</sup> If this is the case the minimum age would be approximately 25, the maximum 67 and the mean 39. This is around 10 years younger than solicitors who found themselves before the SDT.

Profile of Organisation

While the SDT transcripts make it perfectly clear when an action is being brought against a sole practitioner, for actions brought against a partner(s) it is not possible to state the size of the partnership with equal certainty. Generally, SDT reports do not carry full details of the firms in terms of size and specialism. Cautiously, we assumed that as partnerships usually engender joint and several liabilities, certain kinds of disciplinary action could be brought against all partners. Where multiple partners are charged therefore, partnership size might be ascertained on the basis of the number of partners brought before the Tribunal. This assumption is not reliable however, and, of course, making such an assumption does not assist with actions against assistant or associate solicitors, paralegals and so on.

Based on a rough analysis of the organisational background of respondents and the number of respondents against whom charges were brought in each firm; the largest firm examined consisted of 12 partners,<sup>160</sup> and there were 67 sole practitioner firms in our sample. At first it may appear that small partnerships and sole practitioners are over represented in the sample. For context, however, it should be noted that in the year under study, 85.9% of private practice firms in England and Wales were small practices with four or fewer partners,<sup>161</sup> with private practice partner status being over six times more likely than sole practitioner status (38.1% partners to 5.5% sole practitioners) but the bulk of solicitors in private practice were associate or assistant solicitors (48%).<sup>162</sup>

We used the Law Society's 'Find a Firm' database, supplemented by a basic Google search, to ascertain how many of the 181 firms with which the respondents were associated in 2008 are still in existence today. It appears that 73.4% (n 133) of the firms are now defunct in that they have no presence on the database and no, or very limited presence on the web.<sup>163</sup> We found that only 26.5% of the firms (n 48) still offer legal services, i.e., are on the database and or have a substantive web presence.<sup>164</sup> For full details of this search, see Appendix 4.

In terms of organisational information, generally the summary reports of the BDT consistently set out the name and location of the chambers at which the barrister is self-employed. However, when barristers are employed the reports do not give details of the employing organisation, nor do they state the occupation of those barristers who are non-practising or unregistered. We supplemented the BDT reports with searches in the Bar Directory and the web (see further Appendix 5). The largest set of chambers hosting a barrister respondent had nine Queens Counsel (QCs) and 237 junior counsels. There were four barristers in the sample operating as sole practitioners.<sup>165</sup> The average set of chambers in our sample hosted nine QCs and 53 junior counsels.

<sup>159</sup> This supposes a basic pattern of starting the three years of academic legal training at 18 and completing it at 21; then beginning the vocational stage of legal training and completing that one year course at 22. Note: on successful completion of the vocational stage students are 'called to the bar'.

<sup>160</sup> The firm, was Eaton Smith Solicitors, are still currently in practice (<http://www.eatonsmith.co.uk> last visited 4th July 2012). Interestingly the SDT expressed some surprise that the case had come before them. The Tribunal was impressed by the high quality of work conducted by the firm and were of the opinion that this was not a firm, which should be held up to the profession as a bad example at <http://www.sra.org.uk/documents/consumers/SDT/2009/Jan/blakeborough-et-al-9853.07.pdf> last visited 4th July 2012.

<sup>163</sup> Firms were classed as having a limited web presence where reference to them could only be found on web directories such as The Law Directory at <http://www.thelawpages.com> last visited 4th July 2012 and The Independent Directory at <http://directory.independent.co.uk> last visited 4th July 2012. The directories are not reliable enough for it to be categorically stated that the firm is still in existence because the information they contain is generally limited to firms' contact details with no guarantees that this information is current.

<sup>164</sup> By this we mean that the firm has its own web site.

Location of Organisation<sup>166</sup>

Solicitor respondents in the sample were over twice as likely to be based in firms within the London region (n 54 ≈ 19.4%) than the next most popular regions of the North West and Yorkshire & The Humber (both at 20 each ≈ 7.2%).<sup>167</sup> An equal number of practices were based in the South East and the East of England (n 18 ≈ 6.5%), whereas 15 (≈ 5.4%) were based in the West Midlands.<sup>168</sup> London's predominance here is reflective of the Law Society's 2008 statistics, where private practices in the capital region made up a little over one quarter (27.8%) of the total number of private practice firms (10,267).<sup>169</sup> The number of solicitors practising in London has consistently outstripped the number practicing elsewhere in England and Wales, so London's predominance in the sample is to be expected.

We have extremely limited data in relation to the geographic location of the barristers' chambers or organisations at which employed barristers worked.<sup>170</sup> What we do have indicates that chambers and organisations were over thrice as likely to be based in London (n 18) than the next most popular regions of the East of England (n 5) and the South West (n 5).<sup>171</sup> Indeed, as of 2009-10 there were 734 chambers in England and Wales, 347 of which were located in London and 387 in the provinces.<sup>172</sup>

Categories of Charges

From our analysis, breaches of the Solicitors Accounts Rules (SAR) stood out as the most frequent charge brought against errant solicitors (13% of the total charges brought). This category was followed by charges involving failures surrounding information and advice giving, for example, failure to disclose information or providing false or misleading information (10.8%) and breaches of Rule 1 (the basic principles) of Solicitors Practice Rules (9.8%). The prevalence of this later issue was highlighted in the recent SRA research study of firms' attitudes towards compliance, which noted the main area of non-compliance concerns the provision of information to consumers.<sup>173</sup> Moreover, the SDT Annual Report for year ending April 2009 emphasised "the continuing need for greater awareness by solicitors of the Rules of Conduct and in particular the Solicitors' Accounts Rules..."<sup>174</sup>

<sup>166</sup> The location of the organisation from which the transgressor operated was categorised in terms regions, see further n.102.

<sup>167</sup> Data on location was missing in 29 cases. Where charges were brought against more than one member of a firm, that firm's location was counted only once.

<sup>168</sup> The remaining respondents were located in: the South West (9 = 3.2%), Wales (6 = 2.2), East Midlands and, North East (both at 5 = 1.8%) and overseas (3 = 1.1%).

<sup>169</sup> The South East hosted 14.8% of private practice firms, the North West and Merseyside 12%, the Eastern region 10.3%, the West Midlands 7.9%, Yorks & Humber 6.9%, the South West 6.7%, the East Midlands 5.6% and Wales 5%, Cole, supra n.131 at p.6.

<sup>170</sup> Geographic data was available in 38 of the cases and unavailable in 35. This information was lacking because of a combination of reasons, e.g., where barristers were non practicing, unregistered, or the information was otherwise not listed in any of our available sources. The information was taken from the BDT report, supplemented by the Bar Directory. When the latter was used then location data is current rather than where chambers/organisations were geographically based in 2008.

<sup>171</sup> The other locations were West Midlands (n.3), South East (n.2) and one chamber/organisation was based in Yorkshire & The Humber, North West and East Midlands. A final two were located in Wales (note: "Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are not subdivided into GORs but are listed with them as regions in UK-wide statistical comparisons" at <http://www.ons.gov.uk/ons/guide-method/geography/beginner-s-guide/administrative/england/government-office-regions/index.html> last visited 30th June 2012.

The allegations as categorized in the SDT's annual report for 2008/09 yielded some similar results to our findings in terms of ranking but percentages differ. According to SDT figures the most frequent allegations involved, in equal measure, SAR breaches and general 'breaches' (at 34% each) followed by allegations grouped as 'failures' (17%).<sup>175</sup> The discrepancy in percentages is due to a number of factors including the period of time for which figures were collated (we used the calendar year 2008 and the SDT used March 2008 to April 2009) and the fact that we counted each charge separately, e.g., if a respondent breached ten accounts rules then ten was entered onto our SPSS database. It is not possible to tell whether the SDT statistics followed the same method of counting charges. Moreover, our categories were more detailed than the SDT's to allow use a more in depth and informed level of analysis.

With regard to the type of charges brought against barristers, bearing in mind the restrictions already noted on availability of data, we analyzed the 27 cases which resulted in disbarment or suspension.<sup>176</sup> The charges leading to these severe sanctions, all involved breaches of the barrister's Code of Conduct,<sup>177</sup> which we categorized, in Table 6, as follows:

Table 5: Number and Category of Charge Brought Against Barristers

CATEGORY	CHARGE	NUMBER
1	Failure to respond to a complaint <sup>178</sup>	14
2	Pupillage Regulations	13
3	Continuous Professional Development (CPD) Breaches <sup>179</sup>	12
4	Failure to pay an administrative fine <sup>180</sup>	11
5	Dishonesty	8
6	Discreditable/ Disreputable Conduct	7
7	Failure to respond to notification / Request for Information	6
8	Failure to report <sup>181</sup>	6
9	Practising without a Certificate / Holding out as being a Practising Barrister	3
10	Failure to Comply with Directions / Pay Costs	3
11	Incompetence (during conduct of a trial)	1

<sup>175</sup> Note, general 'Breaches' included, for example, breach of the Solicitors Practice Rules, breach of the Solicitors Publicity code and breach of the Solicitors Introduction and Referral Code. The remaining allegations were grouped as 'Other' at 7% (including, e.g., practicing without a certificate, improper utilisation and misappropriation of 'Clients Money' at 5%, 'Criminal Convictions' at 2% and 'Delays' at 1%: see The Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal Annual Report 2008/09, ibid.

<sup>176</sup> We have a list of the 73 barristers (two barristers appeared twice) who faced disciplinary proceedings in 2008 (downloaded from the BSB website in March 2010). The list merely states the barrister's name, the type of hearing (e.g., 5 person tribunal) and the sentence (fine, suspension etc.). Only 27 barristers remain on the website as those whose sentence was disbarment or suspension and thus whose details will indefinitely remain on the records, supra p.22.

<sup>177</sup> Then in its 7th Edition and now its 8th, see <http://www.barstandardsboard.org.uk/regulatory-requirements/the-code-of-conduct> last visited 29th June 2012.

<sup>178</sup> Generally this related to failure to promptly respond to requests from the BSB / Bar Council for comments or information on a complaint.

<sup>179</sup> Generally this related to practising as a barrister having failed to complete the necessary CPD. All barristers are required to complete CPD hours (currently 12 hours after the first three years of practice) and return a record card to the BSB on an annual basis at <http://www.barstandardsboard.org.uk/regulatory-requirements/for-barristers/continuing-professional-development> last visited 29th June 2012.

<sup>180</sup> Generally this related to failure to pay the financial penalty imposed for non-compliance with CPD.

<sup>181</sup> This included failure to report: bankruptcy, being struck off the Solicitors Roll and a criminal conviction.

Based on this small sample size, a nascent observation would be, that breaches of the CPD rules, including failure to pay an administrative fine in light of the breach (n.23), in addition to dishonesty and other discreditable behaviour (n.15), are the main reasons barristers' find themselves before their disciplinary tribunal. Though there were 13 offences in connection with pupillage regulations, these pertained to only three barristers<sup>182</sup> who, in setting up a 'bogus' chambers in order to award pupillage to one of their number, were intentionally operating in such a way as to circumvent the pupillage regulations.<sup>183</sup>

Results of Hearings

According to the SDT Annual Reports for the period March 2008 to April 2009, over two thirds of cases were lengthy, i.e., taking up one or more days of sitting time.<sup>184</sup> At conclusion of the hearing the Tribunal's written order is immediately available to the respondent(s) and as soon as possible thereafter, the detailed written findings are issued along with the order made.<sup>185</sup> The aim is that such findings are produced within seven weeks of the hearing.<sup>186</sup> From our analysis, Figure 5 shows respondents had to wait, on average, three months (90.6 days) from the date of the SDT hearing to receiving the full written results of its findings.<sup>187</sup> The data suggests that where a case involved a female respondent the tribunal took a little longer to produce its judgment and order than a case against a male respondent. We chose a boxplot as the best way of illustrating this diagrammatically as it readily allows comparison between the length of time of hearings involving males and those involving females and shows the spread of data in terms of quartiles.<sup>188</sup> We can see the second quartile (the median) is higher for females, at an estimated 87 days, than for males at an estimated 75 days. The outlying cases do not appear to have skewed this data.<sup>189</sup> There are no immediately obvious reasons why the tribunal might take longer to deliver their findings when faced with women respondents, we would need to conduct further research to see if this is a trend.<sup>190</sup>

In the former case (number 9810-2007 Priya Prashar at <http://www.solicitortribunal.org.uk/Content/documents/9810-2007%20-%20Prashar.pdf> last visited 4th July 2012) the respondent was struck off for conduct unbecoming a solicitor whilst serving a prison sentence for systematically plundering client account and covering this up with false accounting. The crown court judge described her as "...a thief, a forger and a liar". The decision was swift as all allegations were admitted and no representations were made at tribunal. By contrast the decision in case 9862-2008 (Stephen Paul Kettlewell at <http://www.sra.org.uk/documents/consumers/SDT/2009/feb/kettlewell-9862.08.pdf> last visited 10th August 2011), which was heard on 8th July 2008 with the written judgment being handed down on 5th February 2009, took approximately 20 weeks / five months (bearing in mind that the SDT does not sit in August). There is no indication in the report of a reason for this delay considering the charges (misleading clients) were admitted and the judgment is but five pages long. According to the Tribunal the time it takes to produce its written findings reflects the length and complexity of the hearing at <http://www.solicitortribunal.org.uk/search/JudgementSearch.aspx> last visited 4th July 2012.

<sup>188</sup> A boxplot (also known as a box and whisker plot) is a means of graphically depicting a group of numerical data through their quartiles, the lines (whiskers) extending vertically from the boxes indicate the variability outside the upper and lower quartile. Thus it displays information about the range, median and the quartiles. See, e.g., http://onlinestatbook.com/2/graphing\_distributions/boxplots.html

<sup>189</sup> The outlying numbers, the end of the whisker (ibid) showing the highest value, represent cases (as numbered on the database) that were out of sync with the mean data. So there were 202 days between hearing and order in cases 55 and 56 (case no 9752 Olusola Morakinyo AYENI, Colin Chinedu IKOKU at <http://www.sra.org.uk/documents/consumers/SDT/2009/feb/Ayeni-Ikoku-9752.07.pdf> last visited 10th August 2011) and 212 days in case 133 (Kettlewell supra n.187).

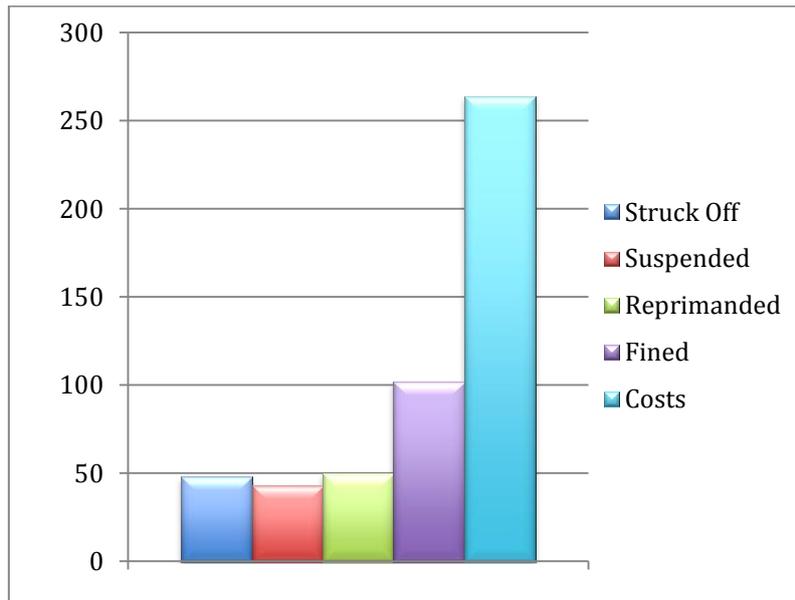

<sup>190</sup> See, for example, research conducted by P. W. Hatamyar and K. M. Simmons 'Are Women More Ethical Lawyers? An Empirical Study' [2004] 31 Florida State University Law Review 785 at http://www.law.fsu.edu/journals/lawreview/downloads/314/Hatamyar\_Robichaud.pdf last visited 29th July 2013.

In relation to all allegations brought against all respondents, the SDT in 77% of cases (n.214) were likely to find the allegations wholly substantiated and in 15% (n 43) were likely to find the allegations substantiated in part. The Tribunal found only 1.8% (n 5) of allegations to be wholly unsubstantiated.<sup>191</sup> Once a finding was made the most common sanction was for a fine and costs to be awarded. Of the sample 36.6% (n 102) were fined and 94.3% (n 263) were held liable for costs. With regard to the severest sanctions: 17.2% (n 48) respondents were struck off; 15.4% (n 43) were suspended and 17.9% (n 50) were reprimanded. Figure 6 shows, in diagrammatic form, how the sanctions were distributed.

<sup>191</sup> Of the remaining cases: six applications (e.g., for restoration to the Roll) were denied; no order was made or the case was dismissed in five instances; one SDT decision was set aside.

Figure 7 below, shows that our sample year, 2008, did not differ significantly in its pattern of sanctions from other years between 2000 and 2013. Thus the general rule is that fines are the most prevalent sanction.

The Bar’s disciplinary proceedings have been published since 2002 and new findings are published on the BSB’s website within seven days of a decision.<sup>192</sup> Of the 75 cases decided before the BDT in 2008 imposition of a fine (independent or in conjunction with another order) was the most popular finding at 40% (n 30), followed by reprimands at 22.6% (n 17). Suspensions at 18.6% (n 14)<sup>193</sup> and disbarments at 17.3% (n 13) were ordered in almost equal measure. Findings of note here were that three and a half times more male barristers were disbarred (n 21) or suspended than females (n 6) and more non-practising barristers were disbarred (n 15) than self-employed barristers (n 11), indeed self-employed barristers were unlikely to face such sanctions (n 1). Finally, there was also some parity in number between orders for no further action (n 5) and advice re future conduct (n 7).<sup>194</sup>

Previous Appearances

We analysed the number prior occasions on which the 279 respondents had appeared before the SDT. For 80.9% (n 225) of the sample, 2008 was their first time before the SDT, whereas 19% (n 53) had appeared before. Generally, for these repeat respondents, 2008 was their second time before the tribunal.<sup>195</sup> It might be suspected that there is an association between the number of previous occasions on which a respondent appeared before the SDT and the severity of the resulting sanction. This suspicion was borne out by our analysis of the 2008 data in relation to the most severe sanction, being struck off. The figures showed that if a respondent had never before been called to the Tribunal there was a 17.8% likelihood of that respondent being struck off. This possibility jumped to 35.5% where the respondent had appeared once before, 40% where the respondent had appeared twice before and 33.2% if this was the respondent’s fourth appearance.

<sup>193</sup> This excludes an order for future suspension should the Tribunal’s finding not be complied with (the barrister concerned did not comply and was therefore suspended but in 2009, outside our year of consideration. However, the reprimand he was given in addition to possible disbarment was counted).

<sup>194</sup> There were 12 findings involving other orders: to attend on Head of Chambers and a Leader of the Circuit (n.2); to pay for or complete Continuing Professional Development (n.4); to pay outstanding fines (n.4) and two miscellaneous orders.

<sup>195</sup> 15.1% (n.42) had appeared once before, 2.5% (n.7) twice before and 1.4% (n.4) thrice before.

Because of the time limit on the publication of BDT findings other than disbarment and suspension, it was not possible to ascertain whether any of the respondents at the Tribunal were 'repeat players'. However, we do know that in the 75 cases brought in 2008, two barristers were listed twice.<sup>196</sup>

Defences and Mitigation

When faced with charges, over 61% (n 172) of solicitor respondents admitted the allegations brought against them in their entirety and a further 17.2% (n 48) admitted them in part. Only 9% totally denied all the allegations brought against them. In terms of defences and mitigation offered in light of this, firm circumstances, e.g., loss of key staff, IT breakdown financial and other work relate pressures, followed by personal circumstances, like the ill health of the claimant or a family member, were the most used (both around 20%). This was followed by lack of awareness of the rules (at 17.9%). The BDT summary reports contain no information in regard to defences or mitigation.

Relationships between Variables

Finally we sought to explore the relationship between a number of variables to see whether there were any statistically significant correlations worthy of note.<sup>197</sup> We found that the list of relationships where there was no significant correlation, to be great. For instance there was no significant correlation between a party's status and the severity of the SDT sanction. So a respondent was no more likely to be struck off if he were a partner rather than if he were a trainee. However, significant correlation did exist between the seriousness of the charge and the severity of the sanction. So, for example, a respondent found to have misused client money and / or to have been dishonest was more likely to be struck off than be subject to any other sanction. Whereas a respondent found to have breached the Solicitors Accounts Rules was more likely be fined than any other sanction.

We had to approach the running of statistical correlations with caution due to the small size of the data set, the level of coding and the time frame used for the analysis, as these issues may have skewed the data. Clearly the even smaller size of the barristers' dataset meant it was impossible to make any meaningful correlations. It is likely that a larger data set, broader coding and a longer time frame would produce less tentative data.

CONCLUSION

Our primary aim, as declared at the outset of this report, was to test methods for the analysis and understanding of how professional transgression occurs in the legal professions, the factors giving rise to transgression and how the professions react to wrongdoing. We hoped to provide a methodology for future work. Of the three methods of data collection used in this pilot the qualitative analysis (the coal health case study) proved the most promising in the short term. The large number of individual cases in the miners' costs scandal, and the public profile of the issue, makes the affair one of great interest. Indeed the coal health scandal remains the largest investigation of a single issue ever mounted by a legal regulator. Yet despite this notoriety only three solicitors were struck off as a result of the scandal and it is arguable that the investigation was clothed with an air of 'moral panic'.<sup>198</sup>

Since this report we have published an article, which focuses on one of these solicitors, the high profile lawyer Andrew Nulty.<sup>199</sup> We used his case as an exemplar of the relevance of theories of transgression to professional disciplinary matters. Theorists, such as Coleman, argue that deviance is a consequence of motivation combined with opportunity.<sup>200</sup> Abel summarises his explanation of the motivation behind financial deviance at the intersection of 'need or greed',<sup>201</sup> but it is more than this that motivated Nulty's behaviour. If we accept that wealth and success are common goals in human behaviour,<sup>202</sup> then in this game of acquiring wealth, and as Wheeler suggests, some participants will stop playing when a particular level of wealth is achieved while for others, like Nulty, the higher the level of wealth acquisition the keener they are to play the game; it becomes a battle of wits, the player against the system.<sup>203</sup> 'Pathology of personality'<sup>204</sup> makes these players quite dismissive of the rules that govern their professional behaviour, they perhaps see themselves as above the law.<sup>205</sup>

However, it occurs to us that disciplinary transcripts are an important resource and interesting in their own right. They are already in the public domain and can provide information on patterns or inconsistencies in the decision making of tribunals as well as the way lawyers work and the circumstances that can lead to transgression. Yet these transcripts are a relatively underused resource in the academic arena. They could be used, for example, in future legal ethics classes, in cases and materials books for undergraduates or in Continuing Professional Development of established practitioners. The least productive avenue was the interviews. It was difficult to get the required level of access in the time frame, in part perhaps because some issues are currently sensitive.

We believe that the use of the material in the study of disciplinary findings provides a new analytical insight into the ethics of the legal profession. Scholars since Llewellyn and Hoebel have shown that the study of trouble cases is a productive means of understanding the social order of groups.<sup>206</sup> We are encouraged that investigation of disciplinary processes is of academic interest and that significant data is publicly available. In any future study it would be useful to follow the same recording year used by the public institution presenting its own data, for example in an annual report. There is no reason to doubt the data and statistics presented by these public bodies, but it is extremely difficult to conduct independent and comprehensive analysis of variables on the basis of the regulators' digested data. There are also key pieces of data that are known to the regulator and tribunal that may not be presented routinely in the transcripts. These include the origins of the charge, the investigation process, the race and ethnicity of respondents and the make-up of the organisation to which they belong. Organisation details are particularly important because of the dominance of theory about the place of organisations in work on white-collar crime. Assumptions about the relationship between small-scale practice and deviance dominate the literature. It is important to understand more about this area to inform 'risk based' strategies of regulation. Finally post-LSA 2007 there is a new regulatory landscape being navigated in new legal vehicles such as LDPs, ABS and multi-disciplinary partnerships, which gives rise to new regulatory and disciplinary challenges.<sup>207</sup>
