From local to global: open and sustainable ways to sharing our teaching resources

Dr Jane Secker and Nancy Graham

Introductions

From sharing to truly open

Questions to consider

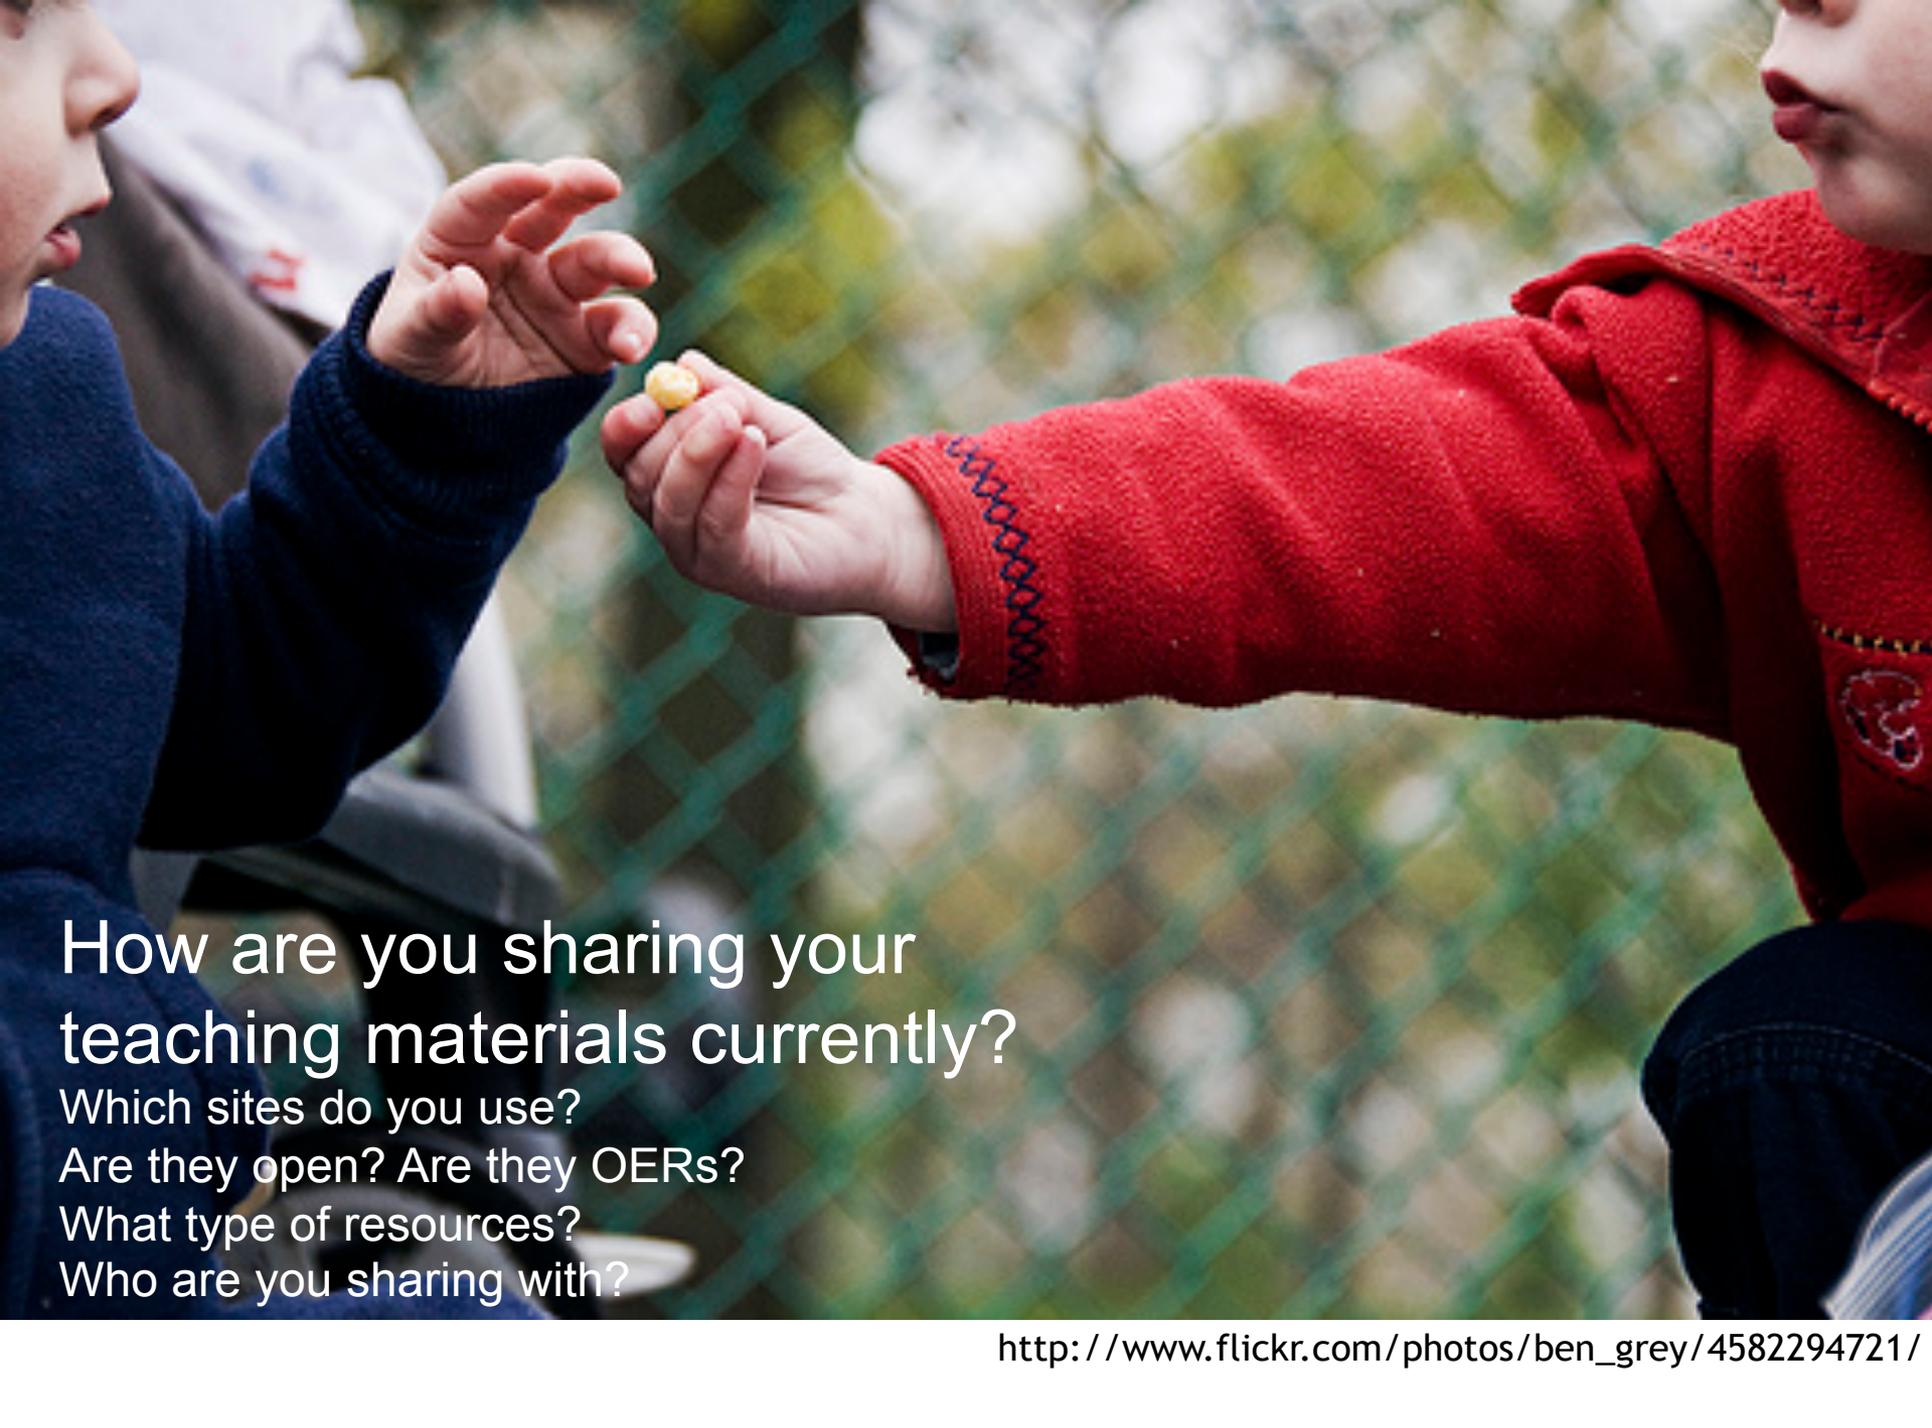

- What might be the barriers to sharing?
- How can we share IL resources: locally or globally?
- How might a community of practice assist?

Some definitions

Open Educational Resources are teaching, learning or research materials that are in the public domain or released with an intellectual property license that allows for free use, adaptation, and distribution. UNESCO 2012

Communities of practice are groups of people who share a concern or a passion for something they do and learn how to do it better as they interact regularly. Etienne Wenger

How are you sharing your teaching materials currently?

Which sites do you use?

Are they open? Are they OERs?

What type of resources?

Who are you sharing with?

Project CoPILOT: outcomes

1. Prepare your resources to be OER and clearly licenced
 2. Host your resources somewhere accessible
 3. Choose generic resources to appeal to more than one sector
 4. Use well established lists/websites and other communication channels
 5. Have a clear plan of attack and TEST EVERYTHING
 6. Have one of the project team take on the moderator role
 7. Encourage participation and contributions
 8. Measure impact, survey your participants

The OER international strategy

- Survey run in late 2013 by Dr Beck Pitt from the OER Research Hub
 - Backed up findings from an earlier survey by Secker and Graham
 - Over 300 librarian respondents
 - Headline statistics...

Librarians and OERs: research findings

- Knowing where to find resources
 - Finding resources of sufficiently high quality
 - Finding suitable resources in my subject area

Other considerations:

- Not having enough time to look
- Technology problems
- Finding up to date resources

<https://www.flickr.com/photos/84388958@N03/7729300102>

Top three challenges for using OER

Top three reasons for librarians selecting OERs

- The resource being created or uploaded by a reputable/trusted institution or person
- The resource being relevant to interests or needs
- The resource having a Creative Commons license

Other considerations:

- Evidence of popularity
- Currency
- Having previously used similar resource successfully
- Lots of detail of how to use the resource, learning objectives etc.
- Easy to download

Top three purposes for using OER by librarians

- To help find available content for learning, teaching or training
- To get new ideas and inspiration
- To enhance respondent's professional development

Other considerations:

- To stay up to date in a topic area
- Broaden resources available to my users/supplement existing resources
- To broaden my teaching methods

- Growing interest following Jisc funding for OER projects in UK universities (2009-2011)
 - Several projects involved librarians advising on copyright, establishing repositories
 - Co-PILOT Group funded by CILIP Information Literacy Group since 2010
 - Aims to support librarians share their own teaching materials and understand OERs
 - Run training, mailing list, website
 - Aims to develop a community of practice

Never a wasted word: writing your essay

Articulate Storyline source file for the online resource found at: <http://libassets.manchester.ac.uk/mle/writing-essay/> "You've already done most of the hard work by preparing your ideas and structuring your plan; now it's time to get started writing your essay. This resource explores the purpose and process of writing an essay, highlighting how you can ensure that your themes run throughout your work, and that every section of your essay supports your argument to help your reader to understand your ideas."

What's the big idea? Developing and organising your argument

Articulate Storyline source file for the online resource found at: <http://libassets.manchester.ac.uk/mle/developing-argument/> "You can't start on an assignment before you know what you want to say and how you want to say it! This resource outlines a five-step technique you can use to help you to identify what your main arguments are, and to organise your ideas into a coherent structure."

Let's explore some more UK resources

Group activity

- Working in a group, read and discuss your scenario and search Jorum to see what resources you find.
- How might you use these materials?
- How would you evaluate the resources?
- Any issues or comments?

<http://jorum.ac.uk>

Other OER repositories

- How can librarians best share their teaching materials?
- What role if there for a ‘community of practice’ and online communities?
- How do we join up the emerging communities to include librarians from around the world in discussions and sharing of resources?
